

Pen Sketch

My name is [REDACTED] and I decided to become a sperm donor for the following reasons.

I am currently not in a long-term relationship and have yet to meet any one I would want to bring up a family with. The way I look at it, it would be a dreadful waste if the circumstances were never to arise where I could have and bring up children. So at the age of [REDACTED], I have decided that if I may never have a family myself, I am at least going to give others the chance to have a family if they are otherwise not able to do so through natural means.

I would want to know that such a child was going to be brought up in a loving environment and instilled with decent values. And it gives me great confidence that this will be the case as any client who is determined and open-minded enough to come through the London Sperm Bank is bound to be someone who will make a great parent.

I am a lawyer by profession and after many years working at one of the biggest City law firms, I now work as general counsel and director for one of my ex-clients, an international shipping logistics company. The company commercially manages over 200 ships on behalf of their owners, most of which are oil tankers and super tankers. The aim is to charter the ships internationally to oil majors [REDACTED] in order to maximise earnings for the vessel owners.

Although my job is stimulating and financially rewarding, my career is not the thing I feel most passionate about. I take the attitude that you work to live and not the other way round.

My main hobby is dancing which I have been doing in one form or another for a number of years. It is strange now to think I used to be a guy with no sense of rhythm and who would never get on the dancefloor unless he was paralytic drunk! I have done a number of social dances to a very high standard such as salsa, modern jive and Brazilian zouk. I have also enjoyed doing street dancing and taken part in shows and performances.

[REDACTED]

These days, I spend most of my time doing competitive Ballroom and Latin dancing and I feel like I have finally found my calling. It is 100 times more technical and difficult than any of the social dances I used to do and you really need to put in the hours of training and practice. The pressure of competing in front of judges and audiences adds extra spice and an incentive to keep improving. It is pretty good exercise too and the easiest way I have found to get a flat stomach!

I have a number of other more conventional interests. When I get the chance, I travel and read. Although I have seen much of the world, there are still a number of things I still want to do such as the Trans-Siberian railway, a tour of India and watching the great migrations of the Serengeti.

I am massively into international politics and economic affairs. As a by-product of my job, I also follow the world stock markets quite closely and I have my own portfolio of international stocks, which I need to carefully tend to on a regular basis.

That is I think a quick snapshot of me as a person right now. I guess if I had to pick one thing about myself, it is that I am extremely determined and have a lot of will power. If I decide to put my mind towards a particular goal, I will invariably achieve it no matter the blood and tears that need to be spilt along the way. As an example I even went completely teetotal for 9 years - but that is a whole other story in its own right!

I would also like to be a great parent one day. But if I never get the chance, then at least I will have given someone else that chance. To be a great parent.
