

Pen Sketch

I grew up in a small town [REDACTED] with my Mum and Dad and older brother and sister, with one sister who was already living on her own [REDACTED]. I lived there until I was [REDACTED] and moved [REDACTED] for university in [REDACTED]. I'm currently doing an Electrical and Electronic Engineering degree [REDACTED] just going into my third and final year.

I've always been active in life, with a strong passion for adventurous pursuits, especially: mountain climbing, skiing, kayaking and rock climbing, and many more examples. I also hold PADI Advanced Open Water Diver certification and would like to one day progress to Divemaster. My parent's tell me I learnt to swim solo long before walking and have always loved swimming, I spend very little time out of the water.

From my early years in school I was always a hard worker and got good grades in most subjects, especially in Mathematics and Science.

Never one to be unconfident, I'm definitely what would be described as an extrovert. Though I don't have to be the loudest one in the group I'm never in the background or silent in a conversation. I do struggle to read between the lines when talking to people, personally I believe people should say what they mean, though this does often lead me into getting into trouble.

Raised into a Catholic family I was always encouraged to be open to other people's beliefs and ideals, and coming from a very multi-cultural area I frequently mixed with many religions and races. Now I don't identify with any particular religion, though I would not call myself Atheist or Agnostic. I like to keep myself open to everything in life.

I decided to donate because I've met people who can't have kids and want them, and seen how happy children make their parents and would love to make someone that happy.
